“What have you found?” asked the stranger.

David hesitated, wondering if he should share his secret. But the man was so close that he could see the wolf, and there seemed no reason to pretend. So he said, “It’s a wolf.”

“ A wolf!” said the stranger. “My! Let’s have a look.” And he came closer and looked down at the small, red animal. It was lying down again, as happy as a kitten, while David rubbed its stomach.

“ Do you think it’s all right?” he asked.

The stranger said : “Why not? Looks fine to me. But I’ll let you into a secret.”

“A secret?”

“ Yes. I’m sorry to say your wolf isn’t a wolf at all.”

“ Isn’t it? Why not ?”

“ It’s a fox ----- a fox cub. Probably about ten weeks old, I’d say. The vixen ----- that’s its mother ----- must be somewhere near. She was probably moving it. They don’t usually leave them for long, but she won’t come ‘close while we’re here. What are you going to do with it?”

Tibby otter and his three brothers were born on a windy March day.

Their home in a hole by the river bank was very dark. But Tibby and his brothers did not mind, because otters are blind till they are about ten days old.

When at last the little otters opened their eyes, their mother made a path up the river bank and took them out for an airing.

“My dears,” she said, “it is time you learned to swim. Today your father and I will give you your first swimming lesson”

Tibby learned to swim very quickly. His mother swam with him on her back far out into the river. Then all at once she dived under the water.
